These are the stories of the victims of the game, and they are a reminder that even the most experienced climbers can be caught off guard by the dangers of the mountains. If you are planning a climb of a 14er, be sure to read this book first.

Chapter 1: The Storm King

On July 11, 1996, a group of six climbers set out to climb Mount Evans, one of Colorado's most popular 14ers. The weather forecast was good, but as the climbers ascended the mountain, they encountered a sudden and violent storm. The storm brought high winds, hail, and lightning, and the climbers were quickly forced to retreat.

As they descended the mountain, the climbers became separated. One of the climbers, a 23-year-old woman named Amy Leenerts, was never found. Her body was eventually discovered by a search team two weeks later.

The Storm King is a powerful and unforgiving mountain. It is a reminder that even the most experienced climbers can be caught off guard by the dangers of the mountains. If you are planning a climb of a 14er, be sure to be prepared for all types of weather conditions.

Chapter 2: The Whiteout

On December 29, 2006, a group of four climbers set out to climb Mount Bierstadt, one of Colorado's most popular 14ers. The weather forecast was good, but as the climbers ascended the mountain, they encountered a sudden and unexpected whiteout.

The climbers lost their way in the whiteout and became stranded on the mountain. They spent the night huddled together for warmth, but they eventually succumbed to the cold. Their bodies were found by a search team the following day.

The Whiteout is a reminder that even the most experienced climbers can be caught off guard by the dangers of the mountains. If you are planning a climb of a 14er, be sure to be prepared for all types of weather conditions, including whiteouts.

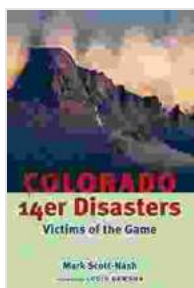

Chapter 3: The Fall

On August 10, 2010, a group of three climbers set out to climb Mount Elbert, Colorado's highest 14er. The weather forecast was good, but as the climbers ascended the mountain, they encountered a loose rockfall.

One of the climbers, a 27-year-old man named Michael Yoder, was struck by a falling rock and killed instantly. The other two climbers were able to escape the rockfall unharmed.

The Fall is a reminder that even the most experienced climbers can be killed by the dangers of the mountains. If you are planning a climb of a 14er, be sure to be aware of the risks and take all necessary precautions.
