The Cowboys were not happy about the AAF's arrival in Dallas. They felt that the AAF was a threat to their dominance in the Dallas market. The Cowboys also believed that the AAF was not a legitimate football league.

The feud between the two teams escalated in 2020, when the AAF folded. The Cowboys were accused of helping to sabotage the AAF by refusing to play a preseason game against the Texans. The Cowboys also allegedly tried to convince other NFL teams not to play the Texans.

The Potential Impact of the Feud

The feud between the Cowboys and the Texans could have a significant impact on the future of pro football in Dallas. If the feud continues, it could prevent the AAF from returning to Dallas. It could also make it difficult for the Texans to attract fans and sponsors.

The feud could also have a negative impact on the NFL's reputation in Dallas. If the Cowboys are seen as being unfair to the Texans, it could damage the NFL's brand in the Dallas market.

The Future of Pro Football in Dallas
