Roy Benavidez was a true American hero. He was born in 1935 in Cuero, Texas, to a family of migrant farmers. Benavidez was a talented athlete, and he played basketball in high school and college. After graduating from college, Benavidez joined the U.S. Army and served in the Vietnam War.

In 1968, Benavidez was serving as a medic with the 5th Special Forces Group when his unit was ambushed by a large force of North Vietnamese soldiers. Benavidez was wounded in the leg, but he refused to leave his comrades behind.

Benavidez fought his way through the enemy lines and reached the wounded soldiers. He then began to evacuate them, one by one. Benavidez made multiple trips through the enemy fire, and he was wounded several more times.

Despite his wounds, Benavidez refused to give up. He continued to evacuate the wounded soldiers until he had rescued all of them. Benavidez's actions saved the lives of eight soldiers.

For his heroism, Benavidez was awarded the Medal of Honor, the highest military decoration for valor in combat. He was the first Hispanic American
